

David had spent all afternoon helping his grandparents get their house ready for Christmas.

Candles were glowing in the windows. Cookies were baked. Grandma's snowmen were properly placed. The stockings were hung over the fireplace.

She led David into a classroom filled with children working at their desks. Miss Linda showed David a wall full of ornaments.

The ornaments were beautiful and made out of items from the jungle.

"These are very cool," David said. "But I am looking for ornaments made from things that no one else in the world has. These ornaments are made out of sticks, vines, flowers, and leaves."
